OVERVIEW

Kevin focuses his practice on labor and employment because he loves working with people. He is passionate about practicing in a field where the law has a strong personal element.

Kevin leads the firm's Labor & Employment practice group.

Frequently working with healthcare systems and providers, Kevin advises and defends employers on a wide range of issues, including high level investigations, leave and accommodation concerns, discrimination and harassment matters, non-competition agreements, reductions in force and sensitive terminations. He sees himself first as a problem solver who enjoys utilizing his industry knowledge to craft solutions to the day-to-day obstacles that arise in employment matters. Clients value his practical approach, as he provides quick and concise answers that minimize legal risk and permit businesses to avoid becoming unnecessarily sidetracked with workforce issues.

While Kevin typically aims to help clients stay in front of problems, at times litigation is unavoidable. When clients do find themselves in court, Kevin is a fierce advocate for their interests.

"Kevin takes a practical and real-world approach to handling issues of employee claims."

He also advocates for clients before laws are made, testifying before the Texas legislature on multiple occasions to help clients shape new state laws and regulations. In addition, Kevin regularly provides counsel on how new and proposed legislation may affect workplace policies.

Featured Experience

Defusing a PR Disaster

When a client was facing a dispute that could have led to highly negative publicity, Kevin worked quickly to achieve a favorable resolution. A health system executive claimed that she had reported that a hospital was violating numerous safety standards, and was then fired in retaliation for blowing the whistle. The client had a compelling defense; however, the health system also recognized that litigating the matter had the potential to damage its reputation, regardless of the verdict. Understanding the client's priorities, Kevin fought hard to resolve the case outside of court, achieving what the client described as an excellent result with a very favorable settlement.
