OVERVIEW

With solid experience in federal and state courts and other tribunals, Trip represents clients in government contracting matters and construction litigation.

Trip represents clients in a wide variety of issues relating to the award and performance of government contracts and construction disputes. His government contract experience includes helping clients pursue bid protests at both the federal and state levels, pursuing claims before the Armed Services and Civilian Boards of Contract Appeals, and advising clients on Federal Acquisition Regulation provisions and other regulatory requirements. Trip's construction litigation experience involves representing general contractors on large, complex projects before courts and arbitration panels. While he is particularly experienced with the construction, engineering, and healthcare industries, Trip has worked with contractors in areas as diverse as telecommunications, manufacturing, and information technology.

Trip came to the practice of law with interests in both public policy and business and a goal of combining the two. As a student at The George Washington University Law School in Washington, D.C., he interned with the United States Court of Federal Claims and with the General Services Administration, both of which gave him early hands-on experience in the world of government contracts. After graduation, he took a position with a boutique construction law firm before joining Husch Blackwell, where he now divides his practice between government contract work, construction claim disputes, and general commercial litigation.

HUSCH BLACKWELL

Thanks to his gift for making order out of chaos, Trip thrives on the complexity of government contracts and construction litigation. Two years in a Baltimore classroom with Teach for America gave him a solid foundation in preparation, thinking on his feet, and organizing complicated facts and theories into a cohesive presentation. He's known for making sense of complex projects records, crafting compelling narratives, and developing nuanced litigation strategies.
