OVERVIEW

Allee handles governmental regulatory matters and litigation for clients so they can get back to business.

Allee assists individuals, companies and municipalities in navigating their collaborations with state and federal agencies. Although she has a particular interest in initiative petitions and statewide ballot research, Allee also works on government compliance, investigations and litigation from the complaint through the appeal process that includes:

- Land use
- Competitive bidding challenges
- Election challenges
- Disputes with governmental agencies
- Hearings before state licensing boards

Allee believes in anticipating the legal path ahead in order to develop solid strategy for clients. Legal teams and clients value her diligence and her problem-solving skills, as well as her genuine curiosity for every case.

Community Leadership

Allee donated her time and skills when the firm assembled a pro bono legal team to represent a Missouri state inmate on Eighth Amendment claims. She was integral to the discovery and due diligence of the inmate's defense.

She also volunteers as a poll watcher during elections, ensuring that polling places are accessible and comply with the law, and reports her findings back to a civic engagement nonprofit organization.
