OVERVIEW

Naomie goes to bat for clients.

Known for her competitive nature, Naomie came to the practice of law with a deep passion for fighting—and winning—for clients. After initially beginning her career as a litigator, she developed a focus on construction litigation, then expanded her practice to also include estate planning and fiduciary litigation.

Naomie litigates a wide range of cases, from highly complex, multimillion-dollar disputes to matters involving small and mid-sized companies, often involving breach of contract claims, collection disputes, or construction defects. She is experienced in both the courtroom—winning her first trial as a second-year associate—and at various forms of alternative dispute resolution for high-value cases. In addition to her work in the construction industry, Naomie also discovered an interest in the private wealth arena as a young attorney: a first-generation Congolese immigrant who speaks five languages, she saw how many families in minority and lower income communities lacked estate planning resources, and she realized how crucial this practice area was. Naomie went on to gain experience creating sophisticated, customized estate plans, and she regularly drafts wills, trusts, and powers of attorney for clients from a variety of diverse backgrounds and income levels.

Naomie also serves as the co-coordinator of the firm's guardianship clinic, a role which brought her into a variety of fiduciary litigation matters. She now combines her passions for litigation and private wealth work by representing clients in guardianship cases, contested probate and trust administration, and asset disputes. Naomie finds that her fiduciary litigation experience helps her offer
