OVERVIEW

With a solid background in tax law, Tommy assists clients with employee benefits and executive compensation matters.

Tommy was drawn to tax from the beginning, focusing his law school coursework on the practice area before going on to earn an LL.M. degree in taxation. He loved the challenge of determining how best to navigate an immensely complex system while finding the most advantageous opportunities for clients. After graduation, he began his career as an attorney in the Big 4 accounting firms, where he advised multi-national clients on the tax implications of cross-border acquisitions, dispositions, joint ventures, and spin-offs.

Although his time with accounting firms helped him gain a deep understanding of companies' financial and business operations, Tommy always knew that he eventually wanted to shift to traditional legal practice, and he joined Husch Blackwell in 2023 as a member of the firm's Employee Benefits & Executive Compensation team. He provides counsel on matters such as employee stock ownership plans (ESOPs); health and welfare plans; 401(k), 403(b), defined benefit, and other retirement plans; employee incentives; and severance arrangements. Tommy is particularly knowledgeable about the tax implications of decisions in these areas.

Known for speaking the language of business, Tommy thrives on fully immersing himself in the business of the clients he serves. His background in the accounting industry means that reading balance sheets and income statements is second nature to him, and he readily understands how best to support client business needs
