OVERVIEW

A registered patent attorney, Scott is an inventor's and patent examiner's greatest ally. His carefully crafted patent applications, which contain digestible language describing complex technical concepts, help to expedite patent prosecution.

Scott strategizes with clients to protect their chemical, life science, medical device and other technological ideas and inventions. Depending on the business's specific goals, these strategies range from conducting patentability searches to filing patent applications in the United States and throughout the world.

Scott's science background and industry experience taught him to think like an engineer and influenced his adaptability to a range of technical disciplines including software applications and mechanical matters. After earning an undergraduate degree in biochemistry, he assisted in the development of filtration systems and industry cooling tower applications at 3M Company. During this formative time, he learned of the value of intellectual property and how patents safeguard the development and commercialization of innovative products—all of which inspired him to start his career as a registered patent agent. For nearly three years he handled prosecution matters ranging from application and appeal brief drafting to domestic and foreign office action responses at a law firm boutique. To serve clients more completely, he pursued a law degree and worked as a patent agent/law clerk as a member of 3M's
