OVERVIEW

Madison assists clients with international trade remedies and supply chain matters.

With a background in supply chain management and an undergraduate degree in logistics and operations management, Madison understands how crucial these issues are to clients and their businesses. Naturally drawn to the firm's International Trade & Supply Chain team, she handles both transactions and litigation, litigating for clients before various governmental agencies and specialized courts.

During law school, Madison excelled in moot court competitions; served as a teaching assistant for legal writing, constitutional law, and evidence; and worked as a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, where she supported complex commercial litigation matters and assisted with pro bono work. An internship with Emerson also provided valuable insight into what in-house counsel seeks from law firms, enabling Madison to offer balanced solutions that allow clients to manage risk effectively.

Madison is known as efficient, thorough, compassionate, and hard working. She offers clients creative solutions that simplify complex problems and systems.
