OVERVIEW

Jack focuses on employee benefits and executive compensation.

Jack was drawn to law school for the opportunity to engage in continuous learning and to be part of a profession that allows curiosity to flourish. The combination of complex legal challenges and the chance to help people daily made a legal career appealing.

Jack's interest in employee benefits and executive compensation was solidified during law school, particularly through tax and business courses on topics such as federal income tax, corporate tax, ERISA, and deferred compensation. These courses revealed a passion for the intricate and evolving nature of tax law. Jack's experience in his university's entrepreneurial clinic, where he provided pro bono assistance to small businesses and nonprofits, as well as his time as a summer associate with the firm's Employee Benefits & Executive Compensation team, also played a significant role in shaping his career path.

Jack is known as driven, thoughtful, and solutions-oriented. With strong legal writing skills and a dedication to client service, he is committed to delivering thoughtful and effective solutions.
