OVERVIEW

Caroline defends clients in complex commercial litigation.

After earning her undergraduate degree, Caroline worked in the marketing office of a law firm in Washington, DC, where she realized her potential as an attorney. This experience motivated her to pursue a legal career. Caroline was particularly drawn to commercial litigation because she enjoys helping clients achieve their goals in ways that benefit the community, such as projects in Houston and Texas.

During law school, Caroline served as the Senior Articles Editor for the Health Law Journal, refining her skills in research, writing, and editing. She also gained practical experience as a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, working on condemnation cases related to property valuation and researching caselaw for the Public Law team.

Caroline is known as a strong writer and listener who is capable of understanding the big picture and tackling issues with confidence. She is dedicated to supporting clients and helping them accomplish their goals in any way she can.
