OVERVIEW

An attorney who bridges law, policy, and business, Alex brings a multidisciplinary perspective to complex litigation.

Alex represents clients in high-stakes disputes that demand both technical skill and business acumen. His approach combines rigorous legal analysis with a deep understanding of how regulatory frameworks and financial considerations shape litigation strategy.

Before joining the firm, Alex honed his ability to operate in demanding, fast-paced environments as a senior staffer to a member of Congress who served on the Financial Services Committee and the Foreign Affairs Committee. This experience taught him to manage sensitive information with discretion, build consensus among competing interests, and deliver results under pressure. These skills prove invaluable when representing clients facing significant legal challenges.

Alex's path to law was deliberate. He saw legal practice as the natural convergence of his interests in law, business, and public service. During his J.D. program, he concentrated on financial courses and earned a certificate in Financial Institutions Compliance, developing expertise that allows him to see beyond immediate legal questions to the broader business implications for his clients. As a staff member of the American University Law Review, he sharpened the research and writing abilities that now anchor his litigation practice.

His summer associate experience at Husch Blackwell provided hands-on exposure to the firm's client-centered approach. Alex drafted motions and research memos, contributed to thought leadership on emerging issues like artificial intelligence, and learned how effective advocacy requires both legal skill and genuine attention to client needs.

Clients appreciate Alex's ability to listen first and respond with clarity. He treats each matter as a partnership, working to understand not just the legal issues but the business context driving them. Whether drafting complex motions or developing litigation strategy, Alex remains focused on delivering practical solutions that align with his clients' goals. His practice includes commercial disputes and matters involving product liability, where the variety and complexity of each case keep the work engaging and challenging.
