OVERVIEW

Page handles real estate matters for energy projects, guiding clients through development, financing, and regulatory challenges.

Drawn to the firm's Energy & Natural Resources industry group, Page appreciates the combination of complex legal work and real-world impact this area offers, as well as the opportunity to support developments that advance sustainability and innovation. Previous experience supporting large-scale projects and a strong interest in negotiation and property-focused work make her an excellent fit for an energy-focused real estate practice.

As a law student, Page externed with a global architecture firm specializing in sports and entertainment, an experience that provided valuable exposure to the inner workings of a corporate client, the drafting of contracts, and the importance of legal advice that anticipates business needs. She also spent a summer as an associate at Husch Blackwell, working on real estate, corporate, and bankruptcy matters.

Clients benefit from Page's detail-oriented approach, creative problem-solving, and ability to listen and communicate clearly. Known for her thoroughness and practical guidance, Page collaborates well with diverse teams and focuses on delivering solutions that meet client goals while anticipating future challenges.
